'Aina “that which feeds”

The 'aina (land) is not just soil, sand or dirt. The 'aina is a heart issue for Hawaiians. The very word 'aina brings forth deep emotion evolved from ancestral times when people lived in nature as an integral part of it.

Who responded?

Hawaii's Youth

“Sustainability is important to me because living on an island limits the amount of resources the people of Hawaii are exposed to. I believe that maintaining the environment is key to preserve the beauty and health of the aina.”

“I am most excited about the Sustainability Toolkit App serving as a networking device for people to become sustainability activists.”

Hawaii's Educators

“[Sustainability is important to me and Hawaii because] it is both our connection to our past and our path to a powerful future.”

“More information in the hands of more people can help to make a difference.”

Hawaii's Business Leaders

“The history and culture of these Islands call for the innovation of sustainability, it is what’s needed for the long term future of Hawaii.”

“It could connect me with others who could use the resources that I have and vice-versa. For the guests who visit our island it could help them to see the issues and potentially contribute in some ways.”

Hawaii's Community Organizers

“Sustainability is critical for our islands’ economic survival and our environmental and cultural diversity. While we live in a global universe, so much of our unique sense of place and diversity will be lost if we fail to achieve sustainability.”

“An app will connect user groups in a way that does not currently exist and increase convenience. Hopefully, it will also engage individuals who previously had not known how to access the type of information that the app will present.”
